FRESH LINES

a PhD summer school

The GCSCR/HLSS Summer School is an intensive workshop-type event for postgrads within the School's core and cognate disciplines. The day aims to provide a collaborative learning experience for postgraduates that will have value for their specific academic field of research and future career.

The day will start with a keynote presentation by Dr Leah Ruppner, from the University of Melbourne, followed by breakout round table sessions. These will respond to issues identified by participants in advance, such as conceptual and methodological challenges. Participants will have the opportunity to get personalised feedback from established academics and experts in their research field. The summer school day will end with workshops on practical research skills such as publishing, social media, networking, and future employment pathways.

Please return completed application forms to freshlinesresearch@gmail.com by Monday October 3 2016. The summer school has a capacity of 40 participants. Successful applicants will be notified via email. All applications will be audited by a committee who will select and organise relevant groups for the breakout round tables.
